

Transitional Living Homes

A public-private partnership: Cost-effective, short-term investments to build employability and independent living skills, and to reduce rates of reoffending

Transitional living homes are voluntary programs for boys and girls who are on juvenile probation and cannot go back to their families after a residential placement. This population is at high risk of failing without intervention.

We show them achievable paths to independence:

- earn a GED or high school diploma
- identify career aspirations and goals
- explore higher education or vocational studies
- volunteer in the community
- find and maintain jobs that match their abilities and career aspirations
- learn to budget, meal plan, create a resumé, interview for a job, negotiate salary, manage a cell-phone, open a bank account, get a driver's license
